Answer: A

QUESTION: 4
The Publish function in Rational Application Developer (RAD), when used in conjunction with IBM PureApplication System, does one of the following:

A. Adds the application to an existing Virtual Application pattern and completes any linkages between components
B. Creates a new Virtual Application pattern and populates it with the application from RAD
C. Adds the application to an existing Virtual Application pattern and starts a new instance of the pattern
D. Adds the application to an existing Virtual Application pattern

Answer: D

QUESTION: 5
A customer has created a virtual application that he wants to customize for two different scenarios:
1.Development - where the workload demands are known to be low and predictable
2.Production - where workload demands are erratic and in which case they want to incorporate a scaling policy to dynamically scale VMs based on workload demand How can he best leverage IBM PureApplication System to accomplish this task?

A. Create two different patterns, one for the development scenario and one for the production one
B. Create a development and a production environment profile for deployment of the virtual application
C. Define two distinct layers in the virtual application pattern and assign the components and policies accordingly
D. Create the virtual application as a reusable component that he can then augment for the production scenario

Answer: C

Exhibit

Part order constraints
IBM HTTP servers start after Deployment manager
Custom nodes start after Deployment manager
Deployment manager starts after DB2 Enterprise
